Vince was the kind of person who touched lives. His existence was anything but insignificant. It doesn't matter how long the conversation was, people remembered him. He will live on through his daughter, his mother, his George, his grandparents, his brothers, his sisters, his nieces, his friends - for he has left a small piece of himself in each of us. He will live on through the breeze while we drive with the windows down and music blaring. He will live on through the single leaf that catches our eye as it falls to the ground. He will live on through the stars that we gaze up at with our bodies resting in the grass. Most of all he will live on through our hearts that were lucky enough to have felt his love.

We would love to have any family and friends there that would like to share in the joy of Vince's life.
